Measuring Sustainability Literacy of students at Liaquat University of Medical and Health Sciences (LUMHS)

Introduction:

Liaquat University of Medical and Health Sciences (LUMHS) is committed to advancing the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) through education, research, and community engagement. The university regularly measures and enhances students' sustainability literacy by organizing awareness sessions, seminars, and interactive activities focused on social and environmental issues.

Sustainability Literacy Initiatives:

To promote understanding of the SDGs, LUMHS conducts sessions every semester that address:

- Knowledge and comprehension of the 17 SDGs.
- The role of youth in achieving sustainable development.
- Social responsibility and community-based solutions.

In 2024, LUMHS organized an SDG Summit, where students, faculty, and administrators participated actively to share ideas and showcase ongoing sustainability projects.

Community Engagement and Practical Learning:

The university emphasizes experiential learning by assigning students community-based tasks aimed at addressing real social challenges. During the academic year 2023–2024, students were given specific targets to engage with underprivileged communities and contribute to reducing social problems through volunteer work.

Seminar and SDG Volunteer Program:

A dedicated seminar on SDGs was organized, followed by a quiz competition to assess students' understanding of sustainability concepts.

- SDG Volunteers were selected from among the participants.
- Each volunteer was assigned a supervisor for guidance and support from the university team.
- Students presented their community project experiences related to SDGs to their peers, fostering peer learning and motivation.

Recognition and Certification:

To acknowledge their commitment and achievements, certificates of participation and appreciation were distributed among students. This recognition encourages continued engagement in sustainability-driven community service.

Conclusion:

Through structured programs, awareness sessions, and active community participation, LUMHS effectively measures and enhances students' sustainability literacy. The university continues to prepare an energetic, knowledgeable, and socially responsible workforce dedicated to serving society and contributing to the realization of the SDGs.
